

A Spring Weekend in Vienna – Erasmus Adventures Beyond Budapest

This past weekend, I had the chance to escape Budapest for a short trip to Vienna with some friends and it was absolutely worth it! The city was full of life, and we were lucky enough to be there during the Spring Festival, which had a really special atmosphere.

Imagine a spring version of a Christmas market : charming wooden stalls, traditional Austrian food, handmade crafts, flowers everywhere, and live music in the background. The whole place smelled like fresh pastries and blooming flowers. It was super cozy, cheerful, and felt like the perfect way to celebrate the season. We wandered through the market, tried local snacks, and just enjoyed the vibe of the city in full bloom.

Vienna itself is beautiful — elegant architecture, clean streets, and a peaceful yet vibrant energy. We didn't try to do too much touristy stuff, but we walked a lot, explored some local cafés, and just appreciated the change of scenery.

Even though it was just a weekend trip, it reminded me how lucky we are to be in the heart of Europe during this Erasmus experience. Living in Budapest has been incredible so far — the city, the people, the lifestyle. But what makes it even better is having the chance to travel around and discover new places with great friends.

This Erasmus journey is flying by, but moments like these are the ones that really stay with you.
