

A Week of Sun, Friends, and Discoveries in Budapest

For this new blog post, I hesitated a lot between two ideas: continuing with my recent updates and sharing what I experienced in April, or telling you about my little trip to Athens. I think I'll keep the second option for another post in a few days ;)

In the end, let me tell you a bit about these past few days, which have been quite nice! First of all, we had a visit from our training supervisor here in Budapest! It was the perfect occasion to show him around the city that's been our home for a few months now. We also took him to a local restaurant in the city center to try some traditional dishes – it's called "Ötkert Budapest." If you're ever in town, don't hesitate to stop by. It's located right next to St. Stephen's Basilica and has a really nice atmosphere! (PS: don't forget that Moise had lunch there 😊).

Afterwards, we continued the day with several visits to the monuments on the Buda side, taking advantage of the return of sunshine and warm temperatures last month.

Here's a photo taken at Buda Castle, where you can enjoy one of the best views of Pest

We ended the day with a beer before our visitor caught his train for new adventures. It was a really nice surprise to spend some time with him. A big thanks to him for thinking of us :)

A few days later, I also spent a whole day on Margaret Island – a peaceful place in the heart of Budapest. There's a beautiful Japanese garden, perfect for a quiet walk. Many locals go there to jog, relax, or enjoy the fresh air. The island also has thermal baths, which are very popular and ideal for unwinding. It's definitely a must-see if you're in the city!
